ABSTRACT

The field of human psychology is so vast, so complex, and so constantly enlarging and enriching by reason of advancing civilization, that no work on the subject can pretend to be more than an introduction. The great central things in mental science, however, are slowly being worked clean of errors and brought into the light of clearness and distinctness. It is also more and more recognized that the science has very practical bearings upon every department of our life.

Keywords: Psychology, self-constituting, Fundamental Reality, human knowledge, sense-perception.
