

DIVERSE OPINIONS ABOUT MODERN CASE SYSTEM IN THE ENGLISH, UZBEK AND RUSSIAN LANGUAGES

Kuysin Tukhtaeva

Uzbekistan State World Languages University, UZBEKISTAN
kuysin.tukhtaeva1961@gmail.com

ABSTRACT

The certain scientific article deals with the syntactic problems of case in comparison with the English, Uzbek and Russian languages. The system of grammatical forms indicating the syntactic relations of nouns or pronouns in linguistics is usually treated as the category of case. In other words, case is a grammatical form which takes part in the formation of the grammatical paradigms of nouns or pronouns. The category of case of the noun in compared languages shows the relation of the noun to the other words in a discourse. In all the compared languages we find the category of case, but their opposition differ in some cases. In the compared languages the noun in the nominative (common) case fulfils a number of syntactic functions. Of these most spread are the functions of a subject, an object, a predicative, an attribute in English and the functions of the subject, a predicate, an attribute and an object in Uzbek and Russian languages.

Keywords: Case endings, categories of case, grammatical paradigms, grammatical forms, syntactic correspondences, syntactic diverse, part of speech paradigms.